As their name suggests, the Deluge Zipless overshoes eschew the zip or Velcro fastenings of other designs in favour of super-stretchy neoprene uppers and an abrasion-resistant elasticated sole with reinforced cleat and heel holes. This design eliminates obvious sources of water ingress but does mean a little wiggling and tugging is required to pull them over road or mountain bike shoes (they're compatible with both). Although billed as 'waterproof', a heavy downpour did breach their defences but the insulation they provided was so good that feet remained warm and comfortable despite being a little damp. The reflective logo and orange stitching are attractive finishing touches, although the heel-pull tab is a tad too small for its intended purpose. The size Large were perfect for my size 10 [44] shoes. JE
