ENDURA IS stepping up its eyewear game and the new rimless Crossbows take the challenge to the likes of Smith's PivLock V2s and the Rudy HyperMasks, asking serious questions about why you need to pay more. A variable-tint photochromic lens allows the Crossbows to adapt to a range of conditions in just eight seconds, letting between 28 and 82 per cent of light through. In UK spring weather they proved ideal, taking both the usual flat grey light and occasional visits from the sun in their stride. The shapeable wire core arms and nosepiece give a personalised fit that aids stability.

VERDICT

Fast-adapting lenses and rimless design at a great price, but no other lens options
