The Endura Snapper 2s are the most sports orientated of the glasses on test, with its minimal 28.7g weight, seriously wrapped design and full rubber-coated arms for excellent grip all highlighting their road-cycling potential. They are, however, just the right side of style driven so as not to make you look like a German tourist when wearing them off the bike. Full UV protection, plus adjustable nosepiece and tenacious grip, make these by far the best performers on the bike, especially when the surface starts to break up. A two-piece variable tint lens is useful for a variety of conditions. That said, we're not sure these are the glasses we'd choose once we'd locked up our bike and were heading for the office.

{ 7 } Best on-bike performance, but the styling... that's up to you
