

Endura Pro SL Biblong £159.99

The Scottish brand has packed in an impressive number of features into its Pro SLs, including three pad width options.

The panels down the fronts of the legs and above the bum are made from a windproof, breathable fabric with a DWR coating. At the side are stretchier panels. Rather than being straight, tapered tubes, the Pro SL's legs are anatomically shaped to avoid the fabric stretching over the knee while rucking up behind it. There's a soft, red, Thermoroubaix lining to trap in the warmth.

Behind the calves are large panels of reflective dots plus white flashes at the ankles for daytime visibility.

The ankles are zipless but the front of the bib does have a short zip above the waist to reduce strap-yank during toilet breaks.

We found the Enduras to be extremely comfortable, with the chamois positioning itself perfectly. We haven't yet had cold enough weather to test the Enduras to their limit but they've been more than a match for the chilliest November day.
