Endura's clothing range has stepped up a gear and the FS260-Pro II is no exception. It's a straightforward jersey, made from sweat-wicking 100 per cent polyester, with three easily accessible rear pockets and a secure zip for valuables. The under-arm areas have breathable mesh panel inserts that will help keep you cooler when you're really making an effort. But the big deal with the FS260-Pro II is the fit. The arm cuffs are compressing thanks to the application nylon/Lycra mix trim, which gives way to tightly fitted shoulders for minimal fabric flap.

A large silicone gripper at the hem held the jersey securely in place, even with fully loaded pockets and on out-of-the-saddle sprints. The tightness and no-nonsense nature of the fabric made it feel quite warm on test. Outside riding would enable the mesh panels to allow air to circulate across your body, but this jersey might be best avoided on really hot days, though it's by no means the heaviest on test. With reflective detailing on the collar and cuffs, it's not skimping on features, making it impressive value for just fifty quid.
