There's a lot that excited us about the MT500, and little that disappointed us, even after we put it through its paces on one of the worst days of the year so far. It's a great fit — a good compromise between snug, yet capacious enough to get a layer or two underneath.

The stretchiness of the fabric helped a lot in this regard.

The sleeves pulled up easily and they also rode comfortably over trail pads.

The hood is awesome — big enough to swallow a helmet — with plenty of adjustment and a useful tab to roll it away when not needed. It also has a great peak and pit zips that are easy to operate — even more so if you use the thumb loops, which hold the sleeves in position as you do it. Excellent venting pockets help disperse heat and also contain a glasses/goggles wipe.

It held its own against some horrendous horizontal rain, with no ingress at all, but like all full-on waterproofs on a warm, wet day, it did start to get sweaty inside when working hard.

At 535g, it's definitely more for wearing all day than carrying just in case, but if you ride in the uplands, and need to know your waterproof is going to cut it when things get nasty, this one definitely will.

WOMEN'S VERSION Huge range of sizes and we love the soft internal cuff.
