

ENDURA MTR SHELL

£139.99

SPECIFICATION Sizes: Men's S-XXL • Weight: 215g • Contact: endurasport.com

A 20,000mm waterproof rating and 40,000g/m<sup>2</sup>/24hr breathability rating are pretty impressive numbers for a lightweight material, and the three-layer Exoshell 40 really is an impressive fabric. And in the MTR

Detachable hood makes Endura an all-day player shell, this technology has been put to good use with a superb, lightweight jacket that definitely bridges the gap between packable and all-day duties. It's light — 215g isn't a lot more than a banana — and it packs down incredibly small; without the removable hood, it easily fits in a pocket. And when it's being worn, it performs impeccably, with a good fit — long back, long sleeves and some stretch in the fabric and snug enough without being too tight. The fabric keeps the rain out, and while the zip isn't waterproof, it is backed up with a storm flap to prevent water getting in. In action it felt every bit as good as the breathability figures claim, but it's disappointing that you can't pull the elasticated cuffs up past the elbows.

The removable hood is simple but effective, and just big enough to pull over a typical all-mountain helmet, though not big enough to then come down the front and protect the face — remember with this type of jacket it is all about compromise. If you want one jacket for all your riding, yet lean towards light, packable options, this is the one for you.

TEST WINNER!

LIGHTWEIGHT JACKETS